week. smashed all records of the year for a high-priced sale, but witnessed the recording of more transactions for the period of the year than has ever been known in the history of real estate activity in Washington. The sale of the Wardman Courts, at $839,000, was the largest transaction effected in 1915, and with the exception of the Southern Building and the Arlington Hotel site probably the largest deal closed in recent years.

During the past week the brokers concluded 122 transactions, exceeding by 50 sales the business done in the corresponding week of last year. In Christmas week of 1913 only 85 transactions were completed, while in 1912 there were reported 104 deals. But 90 trades were effected in the similar week of 1911. Christmas Eve, with its 14 transactions, made the poorest showing of the week. It, however, reflected the week's ods of former years. Last year only 7 sales were recoded on the eve of the holiday, and but 10 wee effected December 24, 1913. Both in 1912 and 1911

> "Incurabel optimists and pacifists feel sure that, owing to the menacing of the Suez Canal by the solid ranks of the central powers peace is now in sight. They think England would never take the chance of a life-and-death struggle for her highway to India, and would rather offer an economically hausted Germany the pipe for the big peace pow-wow.

"This appears improbable to me for lowed closely by the northwest with 36 lots to its credit. There were 22 lots siderable water will have flowed down sold in the northeast and 6 in the southwest.

Harry Wardman and Thomas Bones made the chief sale of 1915 last week when they conveyed to Mrs. Henrietta advance to the foot of the Pyramids. Secondly, no sensible man believes that, if the German diplomats consider the possession of Egypt is such a big trump in the present war game, they would ever advise laying down their carls in sight of the promised land, and thus give their opponents time to regain their strength. And, finally, all this talk about the "road to India," the "artery of British sea power," and similar phrases in connection with the great work of the genial de Lesseps, seems to me to be considerably exaggerated.

Route Much Longer. "Naturally, we must admit that the old route to India around the Cape of Good Hope is much longer and that it requires much more time, coal, and general cost of maintenance. But granting that the way to Asia via the Mediterranian and the Red sea were no longer open to English shirs, it is plain as day that the British Empire would at Pythian Temple tomorrow afternoon. know how to overcome the consequences of this indisputable disadvantage much quicker and with greater ease than Germany, for instance, has been able to do in the case of her economic solution. The travel around Africa would soon be organized down to the smallest detail organized down to the smallest detail.

"When England built up her lower in India there was no canal through the 1sthmus of Sinai. And with the modern technical resources at hand, the entire disaster would be limited to the spending of more money, something which, in these days, when billions are being played with, would not count for years much. Wheever holds Egypt also possesses the Sudan. This is an axiom that seemed to fail only in the case of the Mahdi. But we must not forget that the release of the Mahdi in Khartoum was only possible because Egypt really didn't belong to anybody -neither to the Sultan in Constantinople nor to the Khediye, whose country was occupied; nor to the English, under the irresolute direction of Gladstone.
